

Right – Utilitarian view

Wrong – Kantian view

Right – Nietzschean view

Wrong – Aristotelian view

- 1) I believe that what Natalie Dylan did is right in a Utilitarian point of view. The moral worth of her action (w/c is auctioning her virginity) will be determined by the happiness or pleasure she will be receiving once it has been done. Natalie Dylan believes that by auctioning her virginity with offers as high as 2.5 M pounds will bring her happiness and pleasure because she will be able to pay for a masteral degree which she truly desires. So regardless of the means as long as it will give you happiness, an action is right in a utilitarian point of view.
- 2) What Natalie did in a Kantian point of view is wrong. The morality of her action will be decided upon its maxim. A maxim can be described as a universal law which the majority will accept. Her action will be judged as immoral because of the criticism she will receive from conservatives.
- 3) What Natalie did is right in a Nietzschean point of view because of the principle of “survival of the fittest”. Besides the money and the lavish life she will be having, Natalie will be using her virginity as a means to gain power and an edge over the people making her a master.
